 RESPONSIBILITIES **

Committee
The CIRC’s responsibilities are defined in the Washington University’s Research Conflicts of Interest Policy.

Chair
The Chair is responsible for reviewing Financial Disclosure Statements. For lower risk financial conflicts of interest, the Chair may identify and develop management strategies to address the situation. In higher risk cases, the Chair will refer the matter to a subcommittee or the full committee for review.

The Chair is expected to keep abreast of evolving issues relating to conflicts of interest and to lead Committee discussions of these issues and their influence on the University and the Committee processes. The Chair should also maintain communication with the RECO office, other related University offices and officials, relevant oversight committees, and be prepared to discuss and educate regarding financial conflicts of interest in various University settings.

Vice-Chair
The Vice-Chair is responsible for fulfilling the same duties as the Chair as necessary or when the current Chair is unavailable or conflicted.

Members
Committee members are typically asked to review situations that present moderate to high risks related to a financial conflict of interest. The members’ service on the CIRC involves attendance at approximately 6-12 meetings per year as well as reviewing materials in advance of the meetings. Members may be requested to assist in specific reviews if related to their field of expertise or attend ad-hoc sub-committee meetings if convened by the Chair/Vice-Chair.

Ex-officio members
The primary role of an ex officio member is to contribute information or expertise to the CIRC. Ex-officio members do not vote.
